RESEARCH PAPERS

Job Market Paper. Minimum Wages and Firms' Labor Market Power.

Using matched employer-employee data, I empirically and theoretically study the effects of increased minimum wages in Uruguay. My calibrated model includes oligopsonistic competition and heterogeneous firms. I find that despite the almost doubling of the minimum wage, there was little effect on the aggregate markdown and the extent of misallocation.

Working Papers: How do Top Earners Respond to Taxation? Own- and Cross-Tax Base Responses, Efficiency, and Inequality. With Marcelo Bergolo, Gabriel Burdin, Mauricio De Rosa, Matias Giacobasso, and Martín Leites. R&R Journal of the European Economic Association. Second round.

Exploiting a 2012 Uruguayan tax reform that altered top marginal rates within the top 1%, we estimate intensive and extensive labor supply elasticities of 0.77 and 2.64, respectively. Using linked administrative data, we show that top earners shifted income from labor to corporate and capital tax bases, reducing the reform's redistributive impact. Despite increased revenues, efficiency costs reached 27% of the projected gain.

Work in progress:

- Gender Wage Gap in Brazil. With Chinhui Juhn, Yona Rubinstein, and Angelo dos Santos.
- Tariffs and automation with income effects. With Sameer Malik, Pablo M. Pinto, Garrett Upchurch, and Sunny Wong.
- Trade and emissions in the South Cone. With Angelo dos Santos.

Publications:

- Surfing the Latin American pink tide: secular trends or sudden change in public opinion?: An Oaxaca-Blinder approach. With Matías Brum, Paola Cazulo, and Sabrina Siniscalchi. Economía LACEA Journal.
